SRS Energy Enters Partnership with CertainTeed for Photovoltaic-Integrated Green Roofing Products

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania – March 12, 2008 – SRS Energy has entered into a groundbreaking partnership with CertainTeed Corporation, a leading North American manufacturer of interior and exterior building products, to advance the development of photovoltaic roofing products.

Through this partnership, both companies will collaborate on the development of a polymeric-based photovoltaic roof tile that generates energy without compromising the look of the home.

While most existing solar roofing systems rely on large and unattractive panels, this technology will seamlessly and inconspicuously embed solar technology into the roof tile.

“Never before has a leading roofing manufacturer partnered with a photovoltaic technology expert to bring photovoltaic roofing to a broad audience,” said Marty Low, Chief Executive Officer of SRS Energy.

SRS Energy brings to the partnership cutting-edge knowledge and expertise of photovoltaic science, while CertainTeed brings a longstanding reputation for the development and marketing of innovative roofing products.

“Energy efficiency is a key issue for homeowners, and our assessments show that people are especially interested in harnessing free energy using their roofs,” said John Donaldson, President of CertainTeed Roofing. “They have not, however, been quick to adopt photovoltaic roofs because of the cumbersome look of today’s solar panels. With integrated photovoltaic tiles, homeowners will soon have the option of installing an aesthetically appealing roof that solves this problem. It’s a terrific breakthrough for our industry.

“We are thrilled to be on the leading edge of developing attractive roofing products that help save homeowners money and reduce energy consumption,” Donaldson said. “This partnership will revolutionize the way homeowners look at roofing—from being simply a form of shelter, to being an environmentally-friendly resource that powers a home.”
